OUR SATURDAY NIGHT.

You, it makes a heap of difference,
Since the boy has gone away;
Time drags by so slow, like it was
One whole fortnight in a day.
Sometimes I have caught his mother
Looking up the road like she
Was following to that country
Where she knows her boy must be.
And a dozen times I've halted,
Half a-fancyn' I hear
John a-talking to the horses
Or his quick step drawing near.
Bunter Brown the yearling colts
Doesn't frisk about so gay;
Even Ben and Bill the roadsters
Seem more slow since John's away.
But there's somethin' else that's different,
Since the boy has gone to war;
Used to be we weren't much caring
For the big world's need, nor for
All those people over yonder.
Foreigners, we called 'em all—
Russians, English, French, Italian,
That small use for 'em at all.
But now, well, since John's among 'em,
Seems we're in a bigger place,
And they're just our friends and neighbors,
That we're meeting and to face.
Brotherhood, I guess you call it,
Well, it's come to me and me,
Till we're eager for the warfare
Of those folks across the sea.
And our country, well I'll tell you,
Somethin' grips our hearts so strong,
When we think of 'em to salute
Fighin' there against the wrong.
That we're glad, though we're in sorrow,
Glad our boy can do his best;
And we're hoping, working, praying,
Leaving with the Lord the rest.
—Helen M. Wilson.

The sentiment expressed in this little poem, grips the hearts of fathers and mothers in many American homes today for it has come to be a fact that the family circles not broken, are the exception, and not the rule. Our army—two million strong in the field and in the making—is a young man's army, composed of boys from every nook and corner of the land. The nation has given freely of its best blood for active service at the front, and while it comes to the boys as a rude awakening they respond quickly to the call of duty and are making good.

That these boys should be sadly missed in the old home is the most natural thing in the world, but however strong the attachment, no effort is made to discourage their going, because the call of duty is imperative, and the sacrifice demanded is met with heroism. That a boy should occasionally give way to homesickness is not at all surprising. A lad from Alabama, off on a two days' furlough, skipped out for home, two hundred miles away, and spent a week reveling in the old surroundings. Then his father said to him: "John, you don't intend to be a deserter?" and the boy said "No! Sure I don't! And I am going back tomorrow, but I sure wanted to see you all and so I came home."

A day or two later he showed up at camp and faced a court martial for desertion. When questioned by the officers he said: "I am not a deserter, but I was simply so dead homesick that I had to go back and see my father and mother, for I was never away from them before, but I am not a deserter. I came back of my own accord, and will be on the job till this war is over. What else could I do when I got so homesick?"

Some branches of the service appeal to the boys very strongly. The ranks of the navy are filled with young men who have barely reached their majority, and the aviation camps are crowded with boys in training. Irvin Cobb, who is now behind the lines in France, writes about spending a night at an aviation field close to the front where some sixty noted aviators were present. He said they were the brightest lot of boys that he ever met, and the average age was only twenty-two and one-half years.

These are the boys who don't know what fear means. They call them "blue devils" and "dare devils." Many of them wear the title of "ace" because they have brought down five or more Boche machines. The prediction was made, a time ago, that the war would finally be won in the air. When the American fleet of airplanes is ready for service—and it is being rapidly assembled—Germany will have a wholesome respect for the Yankee in the clouds, for our boys will be there and on the job every minute.

The news, which comes to us from across the water is so full of praise and commendation for the bravery and ability of the American army that we are inclined to be a bit conceited. We are apt to forget that our allies at the front have had four years of the most gruelling warfare ever experienced. The flower of these nations has gone, but the scarred veterans have held the line, with their backs to the wall until we could come to the rescue and fill the gap with the best blood of the nation, and thank God we are in time.

Some one said, not long ago, that the old world had had two years of war and two years of digging in, and the statement is true. Some of the German caverns, thirty feet under ground, were large enough to accommodate one thousand men. They were furnished with billiard tables, pianos and all kinds of games, and were most attractive winter quarters. When the German army "turns tail," and starts for home, the men will be too busy to spend much time burrowing in the ground for protection. With the aid that our American boys can give to the allies, Germany will be kept on the move.

The American boy is resourceful. He possesses initiative in large degree. These characteristics he carries with him as a soldier to the front, and Germany has already discovered that he is liable to bob up where least expected. Back of the boy is a nation which has no rival in resourcefulness and the brain and wealth of this great nation is committed to winning this war. We may lack the "kultur" of Germany—and the Lord knows we don't want it—but what we lack in devilish instinct and hellish barbarity is more than made up in the spirit of humanity which seeks the betterment of all mankind.

This is the thought expressed by the author of the little poem. The thought which hallows sorrow and lightens sadness when our boys leave us to fight against the wrong. The brotherhood of man has never meant much to us until now. We have hardly been on speaking terms with our own people. So busy chasing phantoms, and so engrossed in the pursuit, that we were fast coming to believe that the race of life was every man for himself, and the devil take the hindmost. Germany regarded us as a nation of joy-riders and spenders, not to be feared because too frivolous to be in earnest. Fun-loving, easy-going people, who didn't know how to fight, and who couldn't be taught.

But the war "jarred us loose," woke us up, and converted us in a day from a pleasure-seeking to a serious-minded people. We have gone into it with the same intensity that we tackle everything else—not saying much about what we propose to do, but doing it. The people who accomplish things for themselves, or for the community in which they live, are people with a vision. The American nation today is inspired by a vision. The canopy which has covered it has been enlarged until it takes in the world with all its struggling masses, and the hand outstretched is a helping hand, recognizing in fact, as well as in name, a common brotherhood. Our boys are in the war to save the world from barbarism and serfdom, and we must back them to the limit.

When the war is over the boundary lines of nations will be imaginary, so far as the interests of humanity are concerned. No less creeds, perhaps, but a broader charity. The world's great chancel-house has bridged the chasms which have long existed and the heroes of every battlefield, as well as the fortitude of millions of sufferers at home, is a tribute to a universal faith which is most sublime.

There is so much ignorance concerning the campaign now on for War Savings Stamps, that too much can not be said by way of enlightenment. The government is asking us to invest two billion dollars less what has already been invested in Thrift stamps. This demand was unexpected, and is so much of a surprise that many people are asking "Why?"

The facts plainly stated are simply these: Some months ago the government asked the people to invest two billion dollars in Thrift stamps and a New York banker volunteered to conduct the campaign, but he fell down on the job, and now the government is obliged to take it up, which it has done through the War Savings Stamp. This amount would have been added to one of the Liberty Loan issues but for the expectation of raising it through the sale of Thrift stamps.

The War Savings Stamp is a short time government note for five dollars, face value, due in five years and sold at a discount which represents a good rate of interest. It matters not what we call it—taxes, Liberty Loans, Savings Stamps, or what not. The government must have the money to carry on our war and you and I must help to furnish it. Let us do it cheerfully for the success of our boys over there depends upon the backing we give them. Every load is light when we all get under it. Rock county's share in the War Savings Stamp campaign is one and a half million dollars. We can put it over the top in short order if we will.

Just Folks

THE MEN WHO SAY "YES"

It's easy enough to say "no," when you're asked to carry a little bit more.
"No" is an easy response to the man who asks for a dime at your door.
"No" is the first word that springs to your lips when your shoulders are heavy with care.
And somebody needs you to help in a cause which means extra burdens to bear.
But this is a time when there's need for us all, when sacrifice calls more or less.
And the man that's worth while is the man of affairs who isn't afraid to say "yes."

Excuses are easy to find in this world, but this is life's curious plan, never knows just how much he can do, or when he has done all he can.
The busiest toiler may do something more and often we find that he will.
He manages somehow the minutes of life with some useful service to all.
For not by the deeds that you've already done will men know the courage of you.
The tasks of tomorrow are asking you now, how much are you willing to do?

Can you say that you've given enough to the cause if still you have something to give?
Can you answer them "no," when you're asked to do more, that honor and freedom shall live?
It is hard to say "yes" when you're weary and faint with the burden of your shoulders must bear.
And "no" is the easier answer to make, when you think you are doing your share.
But give more and do more and take on the tasks that are born of a world in distress.
When you're asked to assist do not snuggly say "no," be one of the men to say "yes."

Ashore for a Day.
For three weeks it had rained continually, so in a certain camp on the Mexican border they had dug a deep ditch around their camp to drain off the water. One night the rain stopped its downpour, much to the relief of the soldiers, so the next day a soldier asked for leave to visit a nearby town. This is the way he asked for his leave: "Captain, may I have shore leave today, sir?" It was granted him.

Resume of Moving Picture Programs Of Last Week

By Mrs. Abbie Helms.
The management is realizing more and more the value of the moving picture in bringing its message to the public, and is even now perfecting plans to take the public into its confidence and give out authority in the presentation of events abroad. One of the local picture theaters has booked this film story, which will be ready to be shown in the coming week. The picture houses of the country have been paying four million dollars a month war tax, for the last seven months, besides running pictures for the various branches of war work with expense to the government, and and local conservation campaigns and drives of all kinds are shown in pictures to the public free of cost. Besides that the pictures of the flag and the president are shown regularly to inspire patriotism. In spite of all this patriotic work, consents to just now considering raising their rate to the moving picture houses.

The story of "My Four Years in Germany," by General, shown for three days at the Apollo, is simply an illustrated edition of his book which the characters are represented by living men. It is a thrilling and absorbing story of the treachery, double-dealing and duplicity of Germany in the trying days before war, and shows how well all the events leading up to the declaration of war by the United States, that one wonders how any one can see the picture and remain neutral. There is nothing shown but the facts and the page is given in the book to verify it. Neither are events overdrawn or exaggerated. The characters of important personages like the Kaiser, the crown prince and the German generals are well taken, and the settings of the scenes are made with historical accuracy. The scenes in Belgium are lowering, but are given with restraint, and are not so bad as the reality. The whole thing is a valuable asset to the government in getting the facts in the case before the people, in a way that they can assimilate.

The Sunday play at the Beverly featured the handsome and oftentimes smartly dressed Francis Bushman, as the main character, and the German people of the south. Beverly Bayne as an untamed child of the country, was befriended by him and sent away to be educated. A little child who is in the picture, and who is the daughter of the main character, is included in the personnel. The play was called "Selena Fitzgibbon." A lovely rendition of "Milk and Honey" was given on Tuesday and Wednesday with a children's matinee for Tuesday. Wonderful stage craft was employed in putting on the production, and the result was a most attractive effect. Perhaps the most beautiful scene was that showing the myriads of children waiting their chance to be born, and then being taken up of life carrying away the chosen ones. Much of symbolism which will bear careful study, besides the usual features noticed immediately to be brought to the attention of the thing was satisfying in the extreme.

The play at the Majestic for Sunday was a rather unsatisfactory film, "Who Killed Watson?" which while not unusual in any way, took up unnecessary details of a case, which are not elevating. Watson died of heart trouble, after involving several women in his demise, and after the audience thought the thing was to be a comedy. The Betty Arbuckle comedy was the usual extraordinary funny experience of that youth while clerking in a drug store.

"On Trial" was a mystery story film given on Wednesday and Thursday in which Billie Mae McAllister gave testimony which helped to clear up the mystery of a murder. A trial, and there was committed to a safe, and the key to the situation seemed to be in the hands of a little child. Some thrilling court room scenes were depicted, and the climax was unexpected.

WHO'S WHO in the Daily News

HENRY P. DAVISON.

Henry P. Davison sacrificed his life in the "House of Morgan" when he accepted the Red Cross job. He was a senior partner of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., ranking next to the "big boss," and has been thoroughly schooled in his business.

Davison once was a boy on the streets of Troy, Pa. His path of progress to Wall street and Washington was a devious one. It led him through the routine of a clerk's job in a country bank to bigger jobs in bigger banks until he arrived at a real city with trolley cars, electric lights and skyscrapers. From there he went to New York.

His first bank job was working for an uncle. The job netted him $41.67 a month. That was twenty years ago. Davison is just over fifty. His ancestors were Scots and his education was not unusual.

He began his career in New York as teller of the Astor Place National bank when it was organized. One day a crank, flourishing a revolver, demanded that Davison cash a $100,000 check. Davison proceeded slowly to count out the money and by this ruse permitted the bank's detective to grab the crank.

In 1894 he became cashier in the Liberty National bank and four years later was vice-president. Another year of service made him president. In 1902 he was vice-president of the First National bank and his financial ability was recognized by Wall Street's biggest men. In 1908 he was appointed on the national monetary commission authorized by congress to investigate the financial systems of European countries, and went abroad, where he met Europe's greatest financiers.

In the meantime he was being wooed by J. P. Morgan. While in London he spent a Sunday in Morgan's home. One day in November, 1908, he received a message to call on Morgan and then proceed to Davison's direction was quick. He organized with heavy artillery and told the American people they must contribute that the government might stand out "high flying standards of sacrifice."

When the Red Cross asked for $100,000,000 last fall many people shook their heads and said, "It can't be done."

"We'll get it and more by asking and working," replied Davison. He was right. When the second $100,000,000 was asked, Davison again said, "We'll get it and more," and more than $112,000,000 was the answer.

Davison says the Red Cross is "100 percent efficiency." He pledged his word that every dollar given is legitimately expended for "the good of the cause."

A. H. SHEKEY RECOUNTS OF RAILROAD ACCIDENT AT SINCLAIR CROSSING

Veteran Engineer of Chicago and Northwestern Railroad Tells of Wreck South of Janesville.

A. H. Shekey, for forty-five years an engineer on the Chicago and Northwestern railroad, has had some very close calls to death during that period. Mr. Shekey, who was recently retired on a pension is one of the oldest engineers on the Northwestern system and upon his day of retirement received several letters from the officials of the road commending him for the wonderful record he had made during his forty-five years of running an engine.

During that period he has been in many wrecks, some of them very disastrous, but was never seriously injured in his life. In speaking of his career as an engineer, Mr. Shekey recounted some of the accidents in which he was involved. One accident in particular occurred about five miles south of Janesville at what is known as the Sinclair Crossing. In telling of the accident Mr. Shekey said:

"It was on March 23, 1881 that I was ordered out with what is called the Canadian snow plow. It had been snowing for several days and I had just arrived from Green Bay, a trip which covered a period of two weeks.

There were three engines pushing the snow plow. Frank Spooner was the engineer of the first engine, I had charge of the second one and Maurice Smith was the engineer of the third engine. We bucked the snow all day Sunday and late Sunday evening received a message from the superintendent that the plow was what it was supposed to be that the men running the engines were no good and that if the plow was not cleared up by Monday morning the plow would be what it was supposed to be. The plow was guaranteed to stand all the power and speed behind it.

On Monday morning the engines started and the two other engines stood up decided to hit the snow drift with all the speed we had. We got a good start and drove into the snow drift at a terrific speed and the plow drifted over. My engine went over on top of the leading engine and the third engine tumbled alongside of the other two.

The tank of the third engine was thrown clear of my engine and alongside of the first one. The drift was fourteen feet high where we struck. Most of the engines were out of the engine in a hurry and not one of them injured, but I was caught by the rod which holds the cab to the engine and could not extract myself. The boiler of my engine was thrown over the side and the only thing that saved my life was the snow that I was buried in. As fast as the steam would melt the snow the rescuers would throw more snow on me and in that way was managed to get me out of the steam until they had extracted me.

In that wreck besides the three engines named were Frank Spooner, machinist, Thomas Butler, Conductor, Frank Shekey, fireman, and not one of us was seriously injured."

Mr. Shekey in speaking of the accident stated that in his mind that was the nearest to death he has ever come although several times he has been in accidents where he figured that his chances of getting out alive were very poor.

Three Causes for Gladness.
Bobbie's father had been out of town for a fortnight and the small lad missed him much. Upon his return Bobbie was at the station to meet him, and as greeting said: "We so glad you're here and I'm here and that old train's gone."

Referred to Nat Goodwin.
Dear Sir: "I am going to be married and I don't know just how much to slip the minister. Would ten bucks be about right, or would it be too much or not enough? I have a friend who always pays five, but I think he is a piker."
A. L. T.

A magician was playing in a small town in Pennsylvania last week. He did an illusion act with his wife in which he made his wife disappear. A man in the audience jumped up on his seat and yelled: "Buck! professor, I'll give you $1,000 if you'll show me how to do that."

"She was a charming Junk bride," says a typographically inept reporter of a wedding at Albany.
By the way what is a Junk bride, anyhow? Does that refer to the present?

Out out the picture on all four sides. Then carefully fold dotted line 1 its entire length. Then dotted line 2, and so on until each section underneath is accurately. When completed turn over and you'll find a surprising result.

THOSE STENOUS RELATIVES.

Germany "rich and poor" are urged to go barefooted this summer to save all war profits. How about "paying" when the Germans charge at you, they say "put it up to yo' bee" judgment whether yo' better fight or not."

First Colored Gent: "I don't believe it am possible for a nigger to draft a man and make him fight."
Second Colored Gent: "Boy, they don't make yo' fight. They just send yo' to France and put yo' in a trench and when the Germans charge at yo', they say 'put it up to yo' bee' judgment whether yo' better fight or not."

We have a friend who is a stage carpenter in a vaudeville house in a large city and he has the highest contempt for nonessential occupations. He claims he hasn't much to do, but what he does is important.

"I play up and work the cues for a sketch," he said. "They hang the drop for a sister act, work the light cues, manipulate the automobile and park like a dog for an auto act, and at the skylines in a trapeze act, and attend to my own duties. Outside of that I have nothing at all to do. It's a cinch."

The housekeeper's idea of heaven is a place where hashed-brown potatoes will grow in the garden; where cherry pies will grow on trees; and where the woman at the head of the table may wave a wand and say: "Treat!" and the dishes will wash themselves.

Chief Klein and his fire fighters responded to a full alarm yesterday afternoon about four thirty o'clock to the corner of Riverside and South Jackson streets. A pile of ties standing near the Jackson street bridge had in some unknown manner become ignited. Chemicals were used to extinguish the blaze. The loss was very small.

The Circus in Winter.

One of the Busiest Seasons for the Carl Hagenbeck-Wallace Show.

A circus of the caliber of the Carl Hagenbeck-Wallace Show does not run its season, dissolve and disperse. In the winter the entire establishment is maintained. Only the performers and the workmen are dropped, and more suspension of service, for contracts are frequently made for several years. Owners, managers, contracting agents, advertising agents, treasurer, bookkeepers and others find no idle moments.

Railroad cars, suffering from the hard effects of a season's campaign, need painter and carpenter. New sets and a suitable must be secured to keep abreast of the times; the new route must be laid out and considered, and to do this the management must know the population and character of every town, have information of the business conditions, vicissitudes of the year, etc.

Not in any way does the Carl Hagenbeck-Wallace Circus of the present season resemble the show of the great years. The employees of the great institution number almost 1,000. Twenty-two tents that cover 1,000,000 square feet of space are needed to house the big show in the daytime.

More than 400 performers, together with the famous Carl Hagenbeck trained wild animals, appear on the program of the big show, which will come to Beloit, Tuesday, June 25, for performances at 2 and 8 p. m., and an immense street parade at 10 o'clock.

Wrecks of Men and Women Sent Home to France By the Germans

Even Little Children Who Arrive at Evian-Bains Are Treated as Prisoners. One Young Mother, Fighting Bravely for Her Honor, Was Finally Made Victim of Her Captors' Lust.

A SOLDIER'S MOTHER IN FRANCE
By Rheta Childs Dorr

Evian-Bains is a charming little French town situated near the Swiss frontier. Before the war Evian was a health resort, rivaling Aix-les-Bains and its rich medical baths. It was a place where the rich and the comfortably circumstanced went to regain lost health. Now it is a place where some of the most miserable people in the world may be seen. For soldiers, who have been taken away from their homes, and women, men and children who are no longer of any use as prisoners and slaves.

They were taken in the first victorious rush of the Germans in 1914. As long as they could work, or by threats and promises could be induced to try to do so, the Germans held them as industrial slaves. When, through starvation, exhaustion and disease, they became useless to their taskmasters, they were sent to the front lines, where they were not to be taken back until they were no longer of any use.

When the trains came in at the receiving station at Evian, there were always a certain number of returned prisoners who had to be taken immediately to the hospital. They were suffering from tuberculosis, they were suffering from anemia and starvation, and from all the diseases of neglect. Worst of all, many women and children were found suffering from diseases of vice and crime.

All these sick ones go to hospitals. The American Red Cross established a children's hospital at Evian, since nearly 60 percent of the repatriates are children, and nearly all of them need hospital care. The French have their local hospitals, but where they can take care of the repatriates, they are not actually sick, but extremely exhausted and need to be put into condition to travel further.

The emaciated, hollow-eyed and weary remnant who could walk far, or were taken to the old casino, where wealth and fashion used to be, and where the mayor of Evian made a touching speech welcoming the people back to their native land, comforting and cheering them as well as he could, and then they sat down to the first good meal they had eaten, some of them, for years. But first the "Marseillaise" was sung. "Arise, children of the land."

Who could listen, without deep stirring of emotion, to men and women just released from prison houses of pain and horror singing these words? I cannot imagine how they found voices to sing. They could hardly speak. They just stood there, dumb and broken, their eyes streaming and with tears. Evian, freedom and the sound of their beloved French language could not wipe out their terrible memories.

TALES OF UTTER HORROR
Some of the repatriates are met at Evian by friends and relatives. Some are cared for by the French government, sent to towns and villages well away from the war zone. Charitably, the Red Cross have done splendid work for all refugees, but the problems are often almost insurmountable. It is hardly a man among them is fit for the industry, as for the women, the plight of many of them is pitiable.

POUCH FOR HER HONOR
In Paris there is a house of mercy established and maintained by patriotic and generous French people for the rehabilitation of women, and girls, victims of German lust and Macdonald's managing director of the lives and as much virtue of women as they could find. Successive German soldiers, this brave and virtuous woman continued to resist. Finally, after a year of a life of fear and constant and continual struggle, the soldiers then in her home went to their officers and reported her as a quarrelsome, contentious woman, one who was a practice of insulting German soldiers. Those unspeakable cowards and brutes did this thing for revenge.

The authorities descended upon the woman, took her children away from her by force, sent them to German institutions and sent her to work in a German-conquered mine in northern France. There the mine was a hell. Her husband gone, her children torn from her, her home taken away, placed at degrading labor, her spirit broken, she a prey to German lust at last.

She fell. For about a year she was tossed from one to another of the mines in the neighborhood of that town. She was a victim in time a menace to health, and then the Hun in Berlin ordered her deported. She was sent back through Switzerland and to Evian, where she was sewed to her rag, a card describing her as a syphilitic prostitute.

HOME PATCHED UP.
She was patched up with suffering to make excuses for herself or to tell her story. There was nothing for the French government to do except to send her to a hospital. But Madame Dorr did not die. She improved under treatment, and her distraught mind began to clear a little. One day Madame Croix came to the hospital. Her anger, pity and charity extended to the lowest outcasts among women, and she looked for possible curability among them.

At once Madame St. Croix arranged for her removal to the house of Madame Croix. There the best medical treatment, good nursing and kindness worked miracles. Madame Dorr was seen on the road to partially restored life and health.

Meanwhile, Madame St. Croix had sought and found the soldier's husband. She told him what had befallen the wife and children. He heard with horror, then he dropped his head on the table before him, and wept until his sleeves were drenched with tears. His bitterest grief spent, he raised his head and said:

"Madame, whatever my poor wife's condition, I can have no reproaches for her. I can remember only what she was to me in the past, a true and good wife. I loved her then and I love her now. Give her back to me, and for the rest of her life I will atone to her for what she has suffered."

This great-hearted French soldier had been wounded and was now mobilized in industry. He could make a home for his wife and Madame St. Croix helped them establish themselves anew. Then she began a long search for the children. She wrote to the King of Spain, who, since her friend had who since the war began, had often used his influence with the German Kaiser to find lost and imprisoned French and Belgians. The children of these poor parents were restored to their bruised hearts.

Four of the five children were restored to them. The oldest boy, when the Germans broke up their home, resisted the soldiers sent to take them away. He was only a child. He did not realize the invincible majesty of Germany and he protested with all his young might. The German soldier kicked him, breaking his back. He died, slowly and in great agony.

Notes on Red Cross Work

Arranged by Mrs. Abbie Helms.
All the departments of Red Cross work are being put on a quota basis. That is they all receive orders from headquarters just what is needed and they are asked to make a certain number of the required articles. The heads of the different departments then look over their stock of materials and estimate what will be required to make up the quota asked of them, and make a requisition from headquarters for the amount of material needed to finish their quota.

The School for the Blind sent in 20 sweaters last week. Lima Center, Cookeville and Evansville have also sent in their quota. Edgerly's quilt was 140 sweaters and with the help of her two auxiliaries, Fulton and Newville, she has sent in 162. Of these Fulton sent in 2 and Newville 4 making a total of 12 sweaters. It is Avilon has sent in 22 sweaters. It is packed with these warm garments, representing so many patient hours of work by womanhood. They are counted and tied in packages of five each marked with a large letter and packed into the box of standard size. The value of the yarn knitted into the box is nearly $400, worth the patriotic fervor which was knitted into the handwork, could not be measured, by a mere calculation of dollars and cents.

Optimistic Thought.
A man may joyfully revolt from an unjust ruler.
The Hospital Supplies Department.
The quota for this committee has been received and it is given out for the months of July and August. It includes 48 French convalescent suits (lined with white outing flannel) 41 summer pajamas, and 268 suits of American pajamas. This quota is apportioned in the same manner as the other auxiliaries as well as the local workshop. The auxiliaries are: Evansville, Edgerly, Orfordville, Milton and Johnston. La Prairie, Avilon, Lima Center, Hanover and Footville. Fulton, Fulton Center, and Newville are auxiliaries of Edgerly. Cookeville and Magnolia are auxiliaries of Evansville. Hanover is really an auxiliary of Orfordville although self-supporting.

Responses have come in from the different auxiliaries, accepting the apportionment cheerfully and in true military spirit. They are well as the workers in the local chapter, and those planning the work are in a position to know what is best, just at the moment for the best interests of the organization, and that they are ready to do what is asked of them. In view of the fact that outstanding work has been left over from the last quota, a request is made that all such work be finished up and turned in as soon as possible, before the new quota is begun.

Faithful work is being done all the time, every church in the city having its group of working units accomplish their share. The workshop in the City Hall has been filled to capacity on Tuesday and Wednesday this week, and on Thursday the Star Study group of workers from the Star Study club about 25 in number were busy at the room.

Refugee Garment Department.
This committee has received word that its quota for the next month will be 208 women's petticoats made from dark outing flannel will be needed. This amount make the allotment plan is a business like method of accomplishing results. That is the plan of making a definite number of garments of one or two kinds, means more efficient work, and less scattering of energies, than the former method of making a few things of several kinds. It is felt that those officials at headquarters who are in touch with the situation, and know what is needed, more fully than those in other places.

The class of young girls of high school age which has been meeting at the workshop on Saturday mornings will meet during vacation on Wednesday mornings. They have been making pinpoints recently and the work they are turning out would do credit to professional seamstresses. And not only in the fine quality of work done, but as one of their instructors has said, but as one of their instructors has said, "It has been a perfect joy, teaching them." For the summer months, Miss Joanna Hayes and Doris Amerphol will have charge of their work.

Donations in this department have been received from Mrs. Geo. Thomas from Milton Junction, from Orfordville and La Prairie.
Surgical Dressing Committee.
This department has been working on its fine June quota and expects to finish it on time. The work of making the tampons has been done almost entirely by the evening class of girls, whose deft fingers seem to have been adapted to the work. The especially adapted to the work made by drains and pads have been made by the afternoon classes. The gauze for the quota has been estimated and has been sent promptly when desired.

The cotton, being made by a local firm, which is under government control, is of course secured here. The workers are most faithful. Milton has begun work on surgical dressings, and Evansville and Edgerly are sending ing in hundreds and sometimes thousands of dressings every month, all beautifully made. A large box of supplies was packed and shipped from this department on Thursday.

The Knitting Department.
This committee packed and shipped a box containing 186 sweaters on Thursday, and will pack and ship another box on Friday which will complete the quota of 500 sweaters asked for from this chapter for June. Another quota of sweaters has been asked for to be finished by the last of August and yarn for the same will be sent next week. The Janesville chapter and also many of the auxiliaries have exceeded their quota, and what they have made more than they were apportioned, will be applied on the next quota.

The School for the Blind sent in 20 sweaters last week. Lima Center, Cookeville and Evansville have also sent in their quota. CALLS ATTENTION TO RESULTS OF RECENT MINNESOTA ELECTION

(By Ellis B. Caher)

Milwaukee, June 22.—There is a good deal of illuminating information for Wisconsin in the results of the Minnesota primary election of last Tuesday, and a careful study of that election will serve as both instruction and warning to Wisconsin Republicans and Democrats alike. It is also a lesson to farmers who think the time ripe to crystallize class movements in American politics. The returns are incomplete as yet, but it seems clear that Senator Knut Nelson has been overwhelmingly re-elected. He has been very patriotic and helpful to the government, and despite his republican politics, was openly endorsed by President Wilson for re-election before the April election. Governor Burton has also been re-elected by a decisive vote. He too, has distinguished himself for patriotism and courage. Incidentally, two congressmen who voted for the McAdams resolution and whose records were otherwise doubtful, are thought to have fallen outside the brackets. Minnesota and Wisconsin are close together in population. Minnesota has the larger percentage of foreign born citizens, because she is younger. Minnesota has largely outnumbered Germans there, while the reverse is true here. Scandinavian and mixed Scandinavian blood represent 29.4 percent of the total population in Minnesota, 26.7 percent in Wisconsin. Of the total population only 27.7 percent are native born and of native parentage, while of all foreign born, Minn. represents 72.3 percent and Wisconsin only 73.3 percent. Minnesota's population is more largely rural than is the population of Wisconsin, and for that reason, the Non-Resident League has set great hopes for the Minnesota farmers. One of the current statements of the league is that it is going to be spending to defeat Governor Burton.

Then strong fundamental features of American foreign policy are in Minnesota. First, class politics always have and always will fall under the test of popular understanding, and second, the struggle to appoint to popular understanding always rewards the public man who is unafraid and who really believes in popular intelligence and its fitness for self government.

In Wisconsin. The political situation in Wisconsin is neither new nor unexpected. It is perfectly plain now, as it has been for the past two years, that Wisconsin's poor reputation abroad is due to the sort of men who represent her in congress and in state office. So long as they remain her representatives before the country, just so long Wisconsin is going to be discounted. So long as republicans in Wisconsin seek refuge behind accusations that democrats are "playing politics," and so long as democrats do the same thing, just so long will Wisconsin continue her present representation before the country. Take a very excellent example, the sixth congressional district. Mr. K. Reilly, a democrat who voted for the McAdams resolution, was re-elected in 1916. The present incumbent, the seventh district, Volgt, is no better, if anything worse. But patriotic democrats didn't vote to elect him. They have no responsibility for him and they unqualifiedly disavow him. This year Reilly is again a candidate for the nomination. He ought not to have it. If he gets it, a patriotic candidate ought to be set into the field to beat both Reilly and Volgt. There are difficulties in the way. The primary election law is discouraging to independent candidates. Unless patriotic extremists unite to nominate men who have supported both Wilson and the war, and will support Wilson, one of these undesirable men may be again be chosen to congress. Does it make any difference to a genuine American which ticket the patriotic candidate runs upon? If it does, the opportunity for a choice is weakened and the probability of failure is increased. Only when high class men can be nominated can our present situation be escaped. No man who is desirable will run in the face of the assurance that patriotic voters are certain to separate into factions on party lines. So the outlook in the sixth district is dark. So is it dark, and for similar reasons, elsewhere in Wisconsin. It isn't a difficult problem, this continuing talk about Wisconsin's loyalty. It is all covered by the Saviour's logic in the sermon on the Mount—"by their fruits ye shall know them." Early subtle confuses are shallow. They do not stand the facts. Thus far Wisconsin shows little earnestness in facing these facts.

Influence of Boys in France.

There is one influence at work now, heretofore, that it will take time but it is working rapidly. That is the influence of the boys in France. They are not only writing thousands of letters to Wisconsin, every week, I know of one such letter received by a strong republican father, which said: "Wait till some of the boys at home get wounded. They'll make short work of the Thompson sort of politicians. They are not risking going to be very impatient with men who do. And don't forget that the 32nd division is fighting on German soil. They are not in France."

Vivid Description.

A Wisconsin soldier who has been serving with the French in France, had an opportunity to be in the fight, says in a letter to a friend up state: "The Germans only outnumbered us two to one, so they couldn't gain much. In the north they are about ten to one, but from what I saw they are not gaining enough ground to be in a position to make a mass formation. Such an attack looks like a great gray caterpillar, wheel, nothing can stop, now or then. The good boys are French, seventy-five is good for from ten to forty, shooting with open sights. The faster they come the faster they fall, but the ground gained in that fashion cannot mean victory or success."

That is the most vivid description of a German attack I have encountered anywhere. A Little Humor. The war drives her humor out of the features. The Wall street Journal tells the story of the last Red Cross drive when stores were opened in a number of cities where contributors' articles were placed on sale for the good of the cause. A woman in Oakland, California, had a fine pair of Chinese vases. One of them became broken, and after endeavoring for some time without success to find a match for it, the good housewife placed it in the stock of the Red Cross store, without mentioning it to her family. Several nights later her husband came home with a vase under his arm, remarking that he had run into a wonderful piece of luck. He had found the exact duplicate of your Chinese vase," he said exultantly, and it only cost $20.

A better story even, was told "under the rose" among Milwaukee social people after the very successful "White Elephant Sale" here last season. A lady had presented a friend with a half dozen expensive plates for a wedding present, and the recipient, who had them for some years and whose taste did not agree with that of the donor, sent them to the White Elephant Sale to be sold for the war fund. Their donor saw them and, delighted with the opportunity, purchased them and sent them back to her lady friend, thinking they would make her set up to a full dozen.

The war fund profited and "as one good turn deserves another" they may, some day, serve again, but time will have to intervene.

Christmas gifts are discouraged by the National Council of Defense. It advises merchants not to lay in stocks and advises the people to save the burdens placed upon labor and transportation in all ways possible, not only in the interest of promoting thrift but because labor and transportation are short and we must all eschew needless things. If we would win the war, we must have the campaign in the plan on which the campaign is arranged everywhere, will at its conclusion furnish a complete list of the every man, woman and child in the United States who subscribes, and those who do not will be followed up. Nobody will escape without giving a reason and that reason will be a public record.

Without exception from the time of his campaign for congress to the present, these letters have said nothing but praise of his unflinching patriotism. Congressman David G. Closson is the one man Wisconsin has in congress whose record has been so good. I am glad to see that he is now drawing bouquets from all quarters. He deserves them and the democrats in his district can do no worse or better than to endorse him. Make it unanimous if possible in the one district that has no yellow on its escutcheon.

Since last week's letter was written the German theater, which was then discussed, has been abandoned. It was guardedly stated that the decision was for the coming season only, but it is a safe prediction that there will be no German theater in Milwaukee until after the war. Quite a long time after it.

JANESVILLE SOLDIER WRITES FROM FRANCE

Corporal Henry Rutledge of Co. M. Writes Interesting Letter From "Over There" Telling of Conditions.

Corporal Henry Rutledge of this city, a member of Company M, 128th Infantry, has written a very interesting letter from France telling of what is going on over there. He also tells of the feeling in the boys when they heard that the third Liberty Loan was successful. His letter follows:

Dear Folks: Thought I would drop you a few lines as I haven't written in some time as I have been away from the company for several days and haven't been in touch with a U. S. post office. I will try and write often from now on.

This is no kids affair but real and I think that in the end the Boche will wish there never was an American for everywhere they fight they have wounded the Kaiser's boys to a standstill. Every morning we see air battles and just as we finish breakfast that does one very well for desert. It sure is a sight to see the shrapnel bursting all around an airplane two miles up and at times all we can see is the white dome of bursting shells. I sure must get a Boche for every time I rolled my pack for a hike and ten for poor George who never reached her. If God takes those devils as much as I do they don't stand much chance. If I get through this, I will bring home plenty of souvenirs. I don't know how long a hitch pack will be allotted this time in our trip to the trenches and I only hope that the picking is good. I hear that the last Liberty Loan was picked in a hurry, which shows that the people are behind us strong and it makes us feel good.

Whitewater News

Whitewater, June 22.—Corp. Philip Larkin was practically killed by the findings of the investigation board at Camp Grant yesterday for the death of the negro recruit, Richard Duffey. Duffey was leading a party of six men in an attempt to break their way through the line of sentinels and reach newly arrived negro recruits from Mississippi, who have been assigned to barracks and were under quarantine. The guards had strict orders to keep everyone away from the area. Corporal Larkin withstood the advance of the negro recruits with fixed bayonet and Duffey was pushed into the steel by the men behind him. The negro died in the base hospital yesterday. Canning Plant Starts Work. Evansville, June 22.—The Garden City canning plant started its season's work on Tuesday of this week, and the canning of peas began in full force. This crop is an unusually good one this year and the prices will be much better than last year's. The capacity of the plant materially increased. Corn-huskers have been put to the seed and the harvest is well advanced. It is expected that a few beans will be canned this year as an experiment. Canning companies have the seed necessary and have had to pay big prices for seed. Lloyd Cram, the manager, states that they send corn this year cost them ten dollars per bushel.

THREE-FOURTHS OF TOBACCO CROP HAS BEEN TRANSPLANTED

Excellent Progress Being Made By Rock County Farmers—Two Weeks in Advance of Normal Planting Season.

Weather conditions for the past week have been ideal for the setting of tobacco and Rock County farmers have already planted probably three-fourths of the intended acreage for 1918, and this two weeks in advance of the average planting season in this section of the state. The present cool weather serves to give the roots a good start in the soil and transplanting work is being pushed rapidly.

Except in a few localities not favored by rains during the week, and the soil too dry, this work has proceeded under fine conditions. In early in the field the plants have already taken root and are showing well. The cut worms are reported quite troublesome on fields recently planted, but the different preventives now reduce the losses materially from this source. The end of June ought to see the end of transplanting of the 1918 crop.

The Spitznagel warehouse at Elberton closed packing operations during the week and there are but few more yet to finish warehouse handling of last season's crop. Stemming operations are now being carried on at stations of the packing points in the state giving employment during the summer season to several thousand hands. The shipments out of storage reach 23 cases to all points from the Elberton market since last report.

THE SLEEVE-VALVE MOLINE-KNIGHT

—NO CARBON TROUBLES—NO WASTES OF COSTLY GASOLINE—NO VALVES TO ADJUST OR GRIND

Carbon, arch enemy of other gasoline motors is friend to the Moline-Knight. Sliding sleeve-valves, operated with mechanical regularity by a motor-driven shaft—not by clattering cams and noisy, rattling, uncertain springs—work smoother, more quietly and with less friction as carbon collects. Carbon polishes them as smooth and hard as glass.

Carbon can't clog a Moline-Knight sleeve-valve. No cams, springs, or valve stems to wear, break or require constant "tinkering." Valve-grinding never necessary. No gasoline wasted!

14, 15, 16 miles to the gallon of gasoline—when new. After 5,000 miles, 20 miles to the gallon is common, 7,000, 8,000 miles and up on tires—25% over the average.

Two to 50 miles per hour without a gear shift—without "bucking" noise or vibration. Amazing pickup. More power than is ever needed—at low speeds, on hills and through mud, snow and sand.

And, because of its cross-wise rear spring, unshackled at the left, GUARANTEED to be the easiest-riding car at any price! A ride over rough roads proves it!

Why not rid yourself of that dumpy, bumpy, wheezy little car and get this big, powerful easy-riding and silent Moline-Knight? It costs no more to run. Catalog on request.

THE BIG JOLT

By A. M. CRAWFORD.

For three months he had lived at his club and had stayed away from every place where he was likely to encounter his wife. He had ended the last argument about taking his young stenographer to lunch, to dinner and to places of amusement by telling his wife that he wanted an excuse to get a divorce.

They were wholly unsuited to each other so why be millstones around each other's necks? She was young, pretty, too, and he would see to it that she drew sufficient alimony to insure her every luxury. As for himself—he was a man of the world and could not, would not tolerate bonds that made him accountable to any woman for anything he did.

If he chose to take a pretty girl to lunch, there was no harm in it. He had always been true to his marriage vows, he had told his wife stiffly.

He had deposited money in the bank regularly for her sustenance. Now he had arrived at his lawyer's office to inquire about the divorce proceedings. The attorney informed him that his wife had not drawn a penny from the bank.

"How did she live, then?" David brought himself up with a jerk.

"She has been Dan Goldman's secretary ever since the day after you left her."

"And the boy?" His voice was low with suppressed emotion.

"Old Sue, the only servant she could afford to keep, is taking care of him. They are living in two rooms, far out where the rent is cheap and the boy has a chance to get out in the sunshine every day. See here," said Steele, leaning forward, "there was another woman, wasn't there? Well, what's become of her?"

From somewhere down below came the excited voices of children playing in the sunny streets. The balmy breath of an awakened earth stole in like a quiet, soothing incense.

"There never was any other woman," said David Bryson slowly. "I took my stenographer out a few times, but—bad taste, but lots of men do those things—and Kate heard of it and asked me not to do it again. I said that no woman could dictate terms to me—we never quarreled. Kate was too fine for that sort of thing—so I left in a fit of passion, as you know."

He turned to look the lawyer in the face. "I let that stenographer go on the first excuse I could find and I hope that I never see her face again! Kate working in old Dan Goldman's office! Why didn't somebody tell me before?"

"Why," demanded John Steele sharply, "do men want to make fools of themselves for a bit of flattery? A man likes to think that he is a regular devil with women and always he has a jolt coming to him like you are getting right now. If I were in your place, I would give Kate a chance to be free, to be courted, to be loved as she so richly deserves."

David Bryson stood up suddenly and like a drunken man, stumbled into a little writing room. He dropped heavily into a chair and seized paper and pen in his shaking hands. His wife's face seemed to smile at him from the white paper. It was no time for idle fancies. He shook himself and rubbed his eyes. What would he say to her, to Kate? She would love him always, always. He was sure of that. Then he began to wonder. She had refused his help. She had never lifted a hand to call him back to her. Most women would have found out that he had been bluffing about his stenographer and would have sent for him on some flimsy pretext. What would he do? He leaned his head on his hands. Then a ghost of long ago spread a magic tapestry before his tired eyes.

He was once more in that little blue room at home and it was quite dark save for the single night lamp that burned on a low table beside the bed. Again the agony of young fatherhood laid his gripping hand upon his heart and his eyelids burned with tears, manfully restrained. His mind groped for words to tell the sweet young girl wife how much he loved her as she lay there, white and spent from the birth pangs of his tiny son. "I love you," was all that he could say. "Oh, my dear, I love you so." "And our son," she had added weakly. He knelt down by the bed and laid his head lightly against her full breast. He felt her soft fingers stray, tingling over his hair. "And I love you," she had whispered, "oh, my dear, you know now, how very, very much."

Something warm like rain fell on his cheeks. He put up his hand absently, and, unshamed, wiped the tears away. He reached for a fresh sheet of paper. He wrote something and it slipped it into an envelope, sealed one of the club servants and dispatched it.

The note was addressed to his wife, at Dan Goldman's office, and it carried a simple message: "I love you more than life itself, Kate, dear. Will you forgive me and let me come for you and the boy right away, so that we can get home in time to watch the sun dip down below the garden and hear the white throats hushing a clamorous brood in the blossoming pear tree under our window? Answer by phone at my club! Will be waiting hopefully. With all my heart, I love you and our son. David."

And Probably Spoke Truth.

UNIFORMS FOR WOMEN! BUT WAR WORK, NOT DRESS REFORMERS, SETS FASHION

Left to right: Mrs. John P. Mitchell, wife of ex-mayor of New York city, in her Red Cross uniform. Miss Margery Kay of Detroit, in ambulance driver's uniform; Sergeant Elsie Owen in official uniform of the women's radio corps. The other pictures show the uniforms of the Red Cross motor corps and the signal corps of the women's league for national defense.

Uniforms for women is the fashion note of 1918. What dress reformers have vainly tried to thrust upon women of other years women of this war year are making every effort to adopt. For the American Red Cross has made the uniform for wear the khaki. Those women in actual service "over there" may wear uniforms like those of the ambulance drivers and members of the motor corps pictured.

Money of the Bible.

It is interesting to note that the wild honey named in the Bible may not have been altogether the stores packed away by the bee in the hollows of trees and between the rocks. There is a clear, sweet liquid called honey dew found frequently on leaves and comes from the aphids, the tiny "cows" cared for and "milked" by the ants for their saccharine substance. There was so much of it on the leaves of the trees in oriental climes that it dripped down in considerable quantities to the ground. This must have been the kind named in the book of Samuel where it says: "And all they of the land came to a wood and there was honey upon the ground. And when the people were come into the wood behold the honey dropped."

History of the Sword.

The sword came from ancient Egypt and was used through Palestine, Syria and Asia Minor, India and throughout the western world. It was in Egypt that the three shapes of the sword blade originated, these being the straight, the curved and the half curved. The Roman sword was larger curved. The sword of the Middle Ages was so covered with precious stones as to be veritable art treasures. Among the Moslems the highest title given to a warrior of renown is "the sword of Allah." The Chinese made swords of iron as early as 1379 B. C.

DO NOT APPEAL TO VISITOR

Writer Frankly Expresses Feeling of Disappointment at Sight of Buildings Within Kremlin Walls.

To me none of the ten churches within the Kremlin walls is impressive. Ivan Veliki towers the highest, but it is far from imposing, writes Maynard Owen Williams in the Christian Herald. From one side it resembles a tower rather than a church, yet it has no such quiet dignity as one finds in the Kutah Minar, near Delhi, or the towering dome of St. Sophia with its flanking needle minarets. The other cathedrals are dropped around with careless abandon and a mere disregard for the cost of gold and, but none of them dominates a vista or gathers about itself the other masses in pleasing array. The Kremlin is a mighty whole, composed of many unimposing parts. Its long red walls and splendid gates produce an effect of simple strength which cannot be found within their portals.

The interiors are as disappointing as are the groups of domes which distinguish the exteriors. None is large, none is truly intimate. The effect is of surplus gilt and multiplicity of salutes which remind one of the gopurams of India. Spindle-shanked saints, whose emaciated figures seem too weak to support their gilt haloes, alternate with knights in armor.

Good Nature's Limitations.

"A good-natured man," said Uncle Eben, "ain't allus to be relied on to take an interest in other folks' troubles. If he was he couldn't keep being good-natured."

"The Little Mother Of Shack 3"

A Gripping Story Of A War Nurse In France

It's a New Serial by

ZOE BECKLEY

This new serial by Zoe Beckley is of timely interest just now, when so much attention is being given to the activities of nurses and other war workers in France.

Sally Orme, the central figure in the story, finds herself cast adrift in life through the discovery that her sweetheart since childhood does not wish to go on with their engagement. Sally determines not to let this spoil her life, and soon learns of a way by which she can forget her own troubles in helping minister to others.

All of the incidents to be developed in the story of the heroine's adventures in France will be based on actual conditions and occurrences. Women readers will not only be diverted by a really gripping story of romance, but they will also learn how other women are working for the cause of humanity "Over There."

Though Sally goes to France to forget her own love affairs, it is worth noting that she finds herself drawn into a new romance, much finer than the old one.

This series will be one of Zoe Beckley's best.

Our Lunches

People can never be too careful about what they eat. The best of material should be used, the food must be cooked so as to be palatable, and it must be prepared amidst sanitary conditions.

These three essentials are adhered to strictly in our luncheon department, and the continued patronage of discriminating customers prove to us that our efforts are appreciated.

OUR FOUNTAIN

The popularity of soft drinks and ice cream is daily increasing. The refreshing deliciousness of a cold glass of soda water, bubbling with the healthful carbon dioxide gas, is always welcome these warm summer days. Whenever you want your thirst quenched, or feel that a little refreshment is needed, just drop in at our fountain, or rest yourself in one of our comfortable booths, and order your favorite beverage or sundae.

Our Candies

You can eat candy and still be patriotic by complying with the Food Administrator's orders to hold your appetites under the bounds of the four groups of war candies:

- 1—Chocolate Candies with hard centers—i. e. nuts, nougats, etc.
- 2—Hard boiled Candies.
- 3—Jelly Candies.
- 4—Marshmallow candies.

The government recognizes the importance of the confectionery industry, and the food value and necessity of candy, but it wants you to help the sugar situation by eating less of the varieties that are mostly sugar.

Our window display will help you in making your selections.
